COL. SPALDING

FIRM OPPONENTS

Contractors Sue Kauai Planter
With His Portland Building as Cause

Three New Yorkers arrived on the Wilhelmina last Tuesday to take part in a legal battle which promises to be one of the hardest-fought that court circles have seen for a long time. The principals are Col. & S. Spalding of Kauai and James Stewart & Company of New York, one of the biggest and best-known contracting firms of the mainland.

The New York company is suing Col. Spalding for $50,000, plus interest for several years back. The total amount being estimated at between $60,000 and $70,000.

The suit is over the big Spalding building on the corner of Third and Washington streets, Portland, Oregon, erected five years ago by the New York concern for Col. Spalding. The contractors claim that Col. Spalding still owes them the $50,000—now with interest charges—and Col. Spalding declares that so far from his owing the contractors any money, for various reasons he is entitled to counter-claims and damages in a considerable sum.

Ed Gilbert, G. H. Cramley and H. Rowan are the New York men who have come to testify in the case. Frank Prosser, Anderson & Marx represent the plaintiff and Lindsay & Lymer the defendant. The case will come up for trial before Judge Whitney next Monday. Col. Spalding's defense, it is understood, is that the building developed defects and that the contractors did not carry out the contract terms. The building itself was erected at a cost of approximately $562,000.

Light Sidelights
On Police Court
Scenes

That he and his wife and daughter had gone to their rooms at Helen's Court apartments on the night of September 17 and that while the deep quiet of domestic felicity reigned throughout the apartment, several men had burst into the room and taken him by the collar and shaken him and threatened to strike him—such was the tale of the head of the Greaves family, now arrivals in Honolulu from Australia, as told in police court this morning. Furthermore, his wife and his daughter testified to the same thing. He described how a man had taken him by the collar and actually offered to engage in physical combat with him.

Jack Dugan, proprietor of Helen's Court, who was said to be the principal offender, had a different tale to tell. He stated that he was sitting on the front porch when the man who the Greaves were staying, rushed out and told him that he had heard a girl's voice crying, "I will jump out of the window!" At the same time a couple of windows slammed.

Filled with a premonition of disaster he ran upstairs with a couple of other men and when Greaves attempted to bar the way into the room thrust him aside and turned on the light. The commotion in the room had in the meantime been subdued, but as there was no doubt in his mind that the pair were abusing their daughter, he ordered them to leave the apartments. It was at this moment that he had doubled up his fist and threatened to spoil Greaves' face if he ever heard of him mistreating his daughter again.

He didn't remember whether or not he had laid a hand upon the collar of Greaves—Judge Monsarrat did not push the point.

Earlier in the evening Dugan stated that Greaves, evidently under the influence of liquor, had rushed into his office and said in a loud voice, "For God's sake save my daughter!"

Dugan ran upstairs and entering the room found the daughter sitting in a helpless heap upon the floor holding a wet towel against her forehead. Raising the towel he saw a large bump on her forehead.

"Who did that?" he asked.

"My mother threw a shoe at me," said the girl feebly.

He noticed then that the entire floor of the room was covered with shoes and hair brushes and mirrors and other amusements.

Mr. Greaves referred to this dispute today in court as a slight argument in which his wife may possibly have raised her voice.

Judge Monsarrat evidently perceived a difference between raising a voice and lifting a shoe. So did Charles Chillingworth, and when C. R. Eggle, who had been accused by Greaves in his confusion, began to call witness after witness to the stand to verify the truth of this tale, Chillingworth dropped the case short.

MERCY OF WAVES

Hawaii's Congressional Delegate and Friends Have Hard Time Getting Back to Port

Becalmed for 19 hours about 18 or 20 miles to leeward of Lanai, with the ship's rudder gone, and with a tremendous sea coming down the Hawaiian channel, the ship threatened to knock their craft into a mass of wreckage, was the experience of four well known local residents who started out on a fishing trip last Tuesday afternoon and who made a difficult return to Honolulu Thursday morning.

Prince Kubio, delegate to Congress; Carl Widemann of the county road department, Captain Schmidt and Engineer Kraemer of the German refugee schooner Hermes, and two Japanese were the principals in the adventure, and the yacht La Paloma was well stocked with provisions, and although none of the crew was injured, the plans for a fishing trip off Kailua, Kona, Hawaii, were sadly upset, and the angler-yachtmen have decided that they will not attempt to make the voyage again this year.

The La Paloma left Honolulu harbor at 3 o'clock last Tuesday afternoon, bound for Kailua, Hawaii. At 2:54 o'clock the vessel passed the Diamond Head light and at 4:47 o'clock Koko Head was reached. The vessel, then bent southeast, with a stiff wind filling her sails.

At 11 o'clock that night, when the vessel was about 18 or 20 miles to leeward of the island of Lanai, the wind died down. The yacht lay there all night and all day Wednesday. The currents drifted the yacht to and fro, and a tremendous sea, coming down the Hawaiian channel, banged and crashed against the La Paloma and did minor damage to the rigging.

Shortly after 5 o'clock on Wednesday evening, it was discovered that the rudder had been torn from the La Paloma. A breeze sprung up, and those aboard the La Paloma began the arduous task of trying to reach Honolulu, using the sails to steer by. The vessel started out on a long tack at the end of which the La Paloma was about three miles from the Molokai light. This was about 1 o'clock on Thursday morning.

It was the idea of those on board to anchor under the lee of Molokai, but it was discovered that a tremendous sea was running and that the wind was coming down between Molokai and Lanai. So it was decided to try and run in to Honolulu.

While under the lee of Molokai, the mainmast was taken in and the foremast was allowed to run under jibs and foresails. As the wind freshened up, the mainmast was again hoisted. By putting out a drag in the shape of a small anchor at the end of a long rope, a drag was secured on the La Paloma, which was sufficient to stop her from drifting to windward of Oahu.

In this manner, and still steering by the sails, those aboard the La Paloma finally were able to reach an anchorage in Honolulu harbor at about 11:30 o'clock Thursday morning. When outside the harbor, the American ensign was hoisted up the mast, as a signal that the La Paloma was in distress.

Shortly after the anchor was dropped, Young Brothers sent the launch Hukihuki out to tow the La Paloma in.

Upon inquiry, those aboard the La Paloma learned that word had been telephoned to Honolulu from the Diamond Head lookout station that the La Paloma was becalmed.

Those aboard the La Paloma speak in glowing terms of the excellent work done by Captain Schmidt and Engineer Kraemer of the Hermes. Their knowledge of seamanship stood them in good stead and served help prevent what otherwise might have been a serious accident or tragedy.

WHAT CAUSES COLDS?

This question and "How to Prevent Colds" is asked a thousand times every day. A cold is really a fever, not always caused by the weather but due to a disordered condition of the blood or lack of important food elements. In changing seasons, food elements are essential because they distribute heat by enriching the blood and so render the body better able to withstand the varying elements.

This is the underlying reason why the medicinal fats in Scott's Emulsion quickly overcome colds and build strength to prevent more serious sickness. It contains nature's medicinal fats, so skillfully prepared that the blood profits from every drop, and it is free from harmful drugs or alcohol.
